 Promising Strategies To Reduce Gun Violence

In recent years, communities across the country have struggled to develop effective solutions to the problem of gun violence. This 253 page report, developed by the U.S. Department of Justice, is designed to provide law enforcement, State and local elected officials, prosecutors, judges, school administrators, community organizations, and other local stakeholders with the tools for fighting firearm violence in their communities. It includes a blueprint for communities to develop their own comprehensive, strategic violence reduction plan and a wealth of practical information on demonstrated and promising gun violence reduction strategies and programs.

This "toolbox" approach is intended to provide inspiration and guidance as communities take action against violent crime and, in particular, gun violence. It also is intended to help communities learn from each other's successes. To promote and facilitate this exchange of ideas, contact information is provided for each of the programs profiled.

"Promising Strategies To Reduce Gun Violence" (NCJ 173950) is available free from the Juvenile Justice Clearinghouse (JJC) electronically and in hard copy. See "Ordering Directions". "Strategies To Reduce Gun Violence," (FS 009993), a fact sheet presenting highlights of the report is also available.
