HEAD LICE LAW? The rule requiring children to be excluded from school if found to have head lice has changed. If a child is found to have live lice, it is no longer required to send them home. This applies to nits as well.

The rule change doesn’t mean “exclusion” has to eliminated from the district’s policy. School districts can set their own policies to meet the needs of the school community. Talk to your district School Health Advisory Council to change or develop policies on head lice which may include topics such as “exclusion,” or “parental notification”. See the Texas Department of State Health Services webpage on head lice for additional suggestions for policy development.

Head lice infestation is a social issue not a health threat. No nit policies place a disproportionate amount of emphasis on head lice management than on real health concerns which should be a higher priority. This over-emphasis can lead to unproductive use of time by school staff and parents, missed classes, unnecessary absences, and parents missing work.

No Nit Policies -- The Texas Department of State Health Services (DSHS), the American Academy of Pediatrics and the National Association of School Nurses, to name a few, do not support a “no nit” policy in schools. A “no nit” policy is one that excludes students from school based on the presence of lice eggs whether or not live lice are present. While DSHS does not recommend a no nit policy, we do recognize that school districts may adopt one as a local option. DSHS does not have authority to impose a set policy regarding head lice on districts. DSHS does, however, urge school districts to ensure that its policy does not cause children to miss class unnecessarily or encourage the embarrassment and isolation of students who suffer from repeated head lice infestations.
